

The doctor is in stitches

To see Mrs. Carl D. Anderson sitting beside her physician husband, crocheting while attending a long session of the Utah State Medical Society was not surprising.

What was surprising was to see at the same table Dr. Joseph L. Hatch, a Salt Lake ophthalmologist, also engaged in handwork. Hatch's hands were busily working at a piece of needlepoint while his brain absorbed the heavy expoundings coming from the podium during a USMA convention meeting.

Hatch said he has been doing needlepoint for several years and has presented personal pieces to most of his children. It seemed a good bet that another Hatch child is about to receive a handsome replica of a Norman Rockwell painting, carefully worked by his father.

Dr. Joseph L. Hatch

